

The first example runs the script automatically and the JS event is using an onclick attribute inside the HTML. This means the code is attached to a specific button rather than just running on its own.

This code is activated by an event triggered by the user. The browser is told to wait until the user clicks and then the Java goes into action.